

TEA SELECTION

The Chinese learned to process tea in a different way in the mid-13th century.

Tea leaves were roasted and then crumbled rather than steamed.

By the Yuan and Ming dynasties, unfermented tea leaves were first pan-fried, then rolled and dried. This stopped the oxidation process, which turned the leaves dark, and allowed the tea to remain green. In the 15th century, Oolong tea was developed whereby tea leaves were allowed to partially ferment before being pan-fried. Western taste, however, preferred the fully oxidized black tea, so the leaves were allowed to ferment further.

Yellow tea was an accidental discovery during the production of green tea during the Ming dynasty, when apparently sloppy practices allowed the leaves to turn yellow, but yielded a different flavor as a result.

Five Elements Theory is a Chinese philosophy used to describe interactions and relationships between things. The five elements — wood, fire, earth, metal, and water — are believed to be the fundamental elements of everything in the universe between which interactions occur.
